SCARF Checklist

This activity gets you to explore the practical application of the SCARF Model to benefit from the influential and collaborative value of SCARF when practically applying it to your day-to-day interactions.

The SCARF Model was developed in 2008 by David Rock, in his paper "SCARF: A Brain-Based Model for Collaborating With and Influencing Others."

SCARF stands for the five key domains that influence behaviour in social situations. These are:

Status – the perceived importance relative to others.

Certainty – the ability to predict the future.

Autonomy – the sense of control over events.

Relatedness – the feeling of connectedness and safety with others.

Fairness – the perceived fairness of exchanges between people.

SCARF is based on neuroscientific research that implies that these five social domains activate the same threat and reward responses in the brain that are relied upon for physical survival.

The activity gets you to think about and assess whether, through your interactions with others, you have minimised perceived threats and maximised the pleasant feelings generated by reward. By doing this, you will be enhancing and developing your emotional intelligence.

This activity is particularly useful if you need to collaborate with or coach others, or when you need to provide training and feedback. All of these are vital activities within change.

SCARF Checklist

You can use this document whether you are working through a change programme or not.

Over the next 28 days, take the opportunity to bring your awareness to SCARF and to assess your performance every day in relation to each of the five domains. It will take less than 15 seconds to complete each day but will contribute greatly to establishing the principles of SCARF as a habit so that they become second nature to you.

The steps are simple, at the end of each day, run through the questions below reflecting on your day.

If you can answer a confident "yes" to the question, then select the radio button for that day.

If it's a "No", then leave it blank.

The goal is to get as many checks in the radio button in a row as you can. You can choose to fill it in on work days only if you like, but using SCARF is important outside of work as well as it covers all of your social interactions. This includes your family and friends.

IMPORTANT NOTE: This tool is strictly to help with your awareness and shouldn't be used for self-judgement. It's about setting an intention and monitoring if you have achieved this.

SCARF Checklist

FAIRNESS

Did I conduct myself with a view of providing fair exchange today?

Did I uphold agreed standards both in myself and with others?

Did I avoid showing favour to anyone over others?

Day 1		Day 2		Day 3		Day 4		Day 5		Day 6		Day 7
Day 8		Day 9		Day 10		Day 11		Day 12		Day 13		Day 14
Day 15		Day 16		Day 17		Day 18		Day 19		Day 20		Day 21
Day 22		Day 23		Day 24		Day 25		Day 26		Day 27		Day 28

After 28 days review your results and determine what aspect of SCARF you would like to work on developing.

How do you propose to improve your focus around this SCARF domain?

Who can you get to support you? How can they help?

If you'd like to repeat the activity over another 28 days, then feel free to do so.
